Polish University Abroad and Institute of Pedagogy, University of Szczecin invite to London, on 12th May 2019, to the international conference. The purpose of the conference is to develop a platform for interdisciplinary discussion on the recognition and understanding of human activities in the dynamically developing world of science, education and culture, initiated with PhD seminar meetings at Polish University Abroad in London.

Issues related to human activities in many areas of social life can be defined by conflicts arising between what belongs to a group and what is private, relating to the individual. On the one hand, we co-exist and we are affected by mutual relations that we accept as something essential. On the other hand, we are creating internal “wall”, strongly influenced by the social context, even if it could mean some kind of alienation. We acquire the dichotomous way of social life via learning processes. But we also pass it on to others, through social interactions, which increases interest in looking for value of life. Social sciences directly raise questions about phenomenon, processes, structure and order, strength, changes and the transformation of the relation between humans. Those sciences are looking for an answer to the question: “Why it happens?”, “What can we do with it?”

Scientific insight and research regarding the reality makes sense only if it serves to human beings. This way all the intentions and results of research efforts should be continuously assessed. One of the best opportunities for it are – among others – scientific conferences and seminars. They enable the development of scientific and practical discourse through the descriptions, analysis, interpretations and implementation of cognition effects.
